The song Soon May the Wellerman Come is a New Zealand folksong and was collected in the mid-1960s by Neil Colquhoun (1929-2014). According to Colquhoun its source was a Mr. F. R. Woods who, at that time, was aged in his 80s and had learned the song from his uncle. Neil Colquhoun led the early New Zealand folk group The Song Spinners.

Around 1833 three English brothers – Edward, George and Joseph Weller – established a provision supply base for the whalers at 'Otago' (an approximation of the Maori name Otakou). A visit from the 'Wellermen' or 'Wellerman' was always looked forward to by the whalers.
